

7521128936.txt

Startups will wither and die

Innovation will be stifled

The proposed changes amount to censorship of speech, only those who pay get their message heard.

The large Internet providers could already cut "congestion" on their networks, they just want to get paid exorbitantly for doing so. They tighten the screws to extort higher and higher subscription costs. Now they want to punish the successful companies that create the demand for their (ISP's) services. Other nations in the world provide better service at lower cost to consumers.

Classify internet service providers as "Common Carriers" and end this charade of "Net Neutrality can't be enforced".