

7521130181.txt

Entrusting any ISP to be the arbiters of which businesses be they established or just starting out will succeed based on how well they will allow that business to communicate to their customers is not a good idea. In the past I have seen where giving foxes keys to henhouses did not work out for the chickens.

In this case all of America, and probably the rest of the internet using world are the chickens hoping you will hold onto your keys.

I think the ISPs should be considered and handled as common carriers.

Please don't mess this up.

Clifford Sherman