The FCC's recent direction against net neutrality is not in the interest of the American people - it is for corporate conglomerates to profit. Tom Wheeler, Mignon Clyburn, and Jessica Rosenworcel should be ashamed of what they are doing in favor of money.

I do not agree that the FCC should allow ISP's to charge money in order to prioritize traffic, and I believe the FCC should be moving in the same direction. Instead, simply classify ISP's as Tier II service providers and regulate them with current legislation put in place.
