

7521130615.txt

I simply cannot believe you're willing to gut the open internet as we know it and bow down to corporate interests. (how much did Comcast give you, and where can I get in on that action?)

It's bad enough you've allowed antitrust situations and cabals to exist within the realm of communications this far, but to create yet another way for those of us struggling to stay in the lower end of the middle class to fall farther below the minority with money is disgusting and despicable.

Have you no courage?

The time has come for Internet access to be a public utility, just like our electricity, our power, our water/sewer, and our gas/oil.

Every year, more and more countries adopt this policy. Go figure that the average speed of these countries is twice to four times what ours is. Also, go figure that their price for access is less than what our average is.

Stop being cowards and do the right thing.