

The wrong classification.

That is what has got us up to this point. A decision in 2002 that classified ISPs as information services as opposed to the utilities that they are. I ask the FCC to reconsider this classification and put ISPs under a Title II classification. The internet is not something that should be tampered and restricted by a single classification from a small body of persons. The internet is not something to be abused by archaic political decisions and immoral legalese.

The internet is a special place, an unfiltered community of minds that interact freely with one another. This is not HBO GO, this is a utility same as telephone communication, if not more so. To do away with an open internet will be an attack on it and the morals promoted within it. When poorly written laws take effect citizens will revolt in a manner that is appropriate. I guarantee you if you do this that hacker groups such as anonymous will become more active, using their skills to take down major financial networks.

FCC judges, if you protect the open internet your careers will most likely be over. I know these big companies hire powerful lobbyists and funnel money where needed to leverage policy. In spite of this, I can promise that you will be remembered and supported. Your careers as FCC judges will most likely have an end date, but what you will have started will be great. With only one life to live on this Earth, what more of a legacy can you ask for?
