Dear FCC,

I'm Thomas Windham and I live in Seattle, WA.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) should treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because new, innovative services that can't afford expensive fees for better service will be less likely to succeed.

There is no real competition in broadband in most areas of the United States.

Without protecting Net Neutrality, things will only get worse. If there were real competition, perhaps this wouldn't matter so much. If I didn't like what Comcast was doing, I could simply go with a competitor. There is not other competitor in my area. For once, FCC, do your job and protect we the people and not large corporations. For once, do your job.
