

7521132378.txt

I have never been stimulated to make a public commentary such as this, but I am outraged at the news today. The FCC's decision is a terrible, terrible mistake.

Today, the FCC has overturned its previous views expressed in 2005 and 2010 which established "net neutrality" rules. This "fast lane" plan would be only to the benefit of a select few corporations. I have read no convincing evidence that the "fast lane" plan would have any potential benefit for consumers.

Rather, numerous organizations have made clear and convincing arguments that rules disrupting "net neutrality will inevitably result in an internet that is hostile to competition, innovation, and individual expression.

Please reconsider this ruling and preserve net neutrality!

Thank you,
Philip Berry, MD