

7521133508.txt

I believe that the access to the internet should not be restricted to those who have the deepest pockets. Access and bandwidth should be provided at regulated rates so that smaller businesses can grow and flourish without having to compete with the deep pockets of Comcast, Disney or whomever might desire to charge more to favor one service over another, or pay more to crowd out other voices.

I believe that almost every citizen who is not somehow associated with major ISPs or telecoms shares these views and that the only way the FCC could arrive at any system of differential rates for the same access is through lobbying from said ISP/telecoms against the wishes of the American and indeed world public, as much of the services and bandwidth are sourced from or flow through US fiber and cables.

The internet is a shared service and should remain so in perpetuity.

Please reconsider the improper choices made in the proposed legislation.

Brad Hopper