Preserving net neutrality in my opinion is synonymous with supporting free enterprise. More and more the corporate giants have been granted legal authority to block competition by virtue of government granted monopolies in their market, broad and vague patents as well as other barriers to entry. Provider consolidation will only make it worse. The internet has been the last level playing field where innovation has been able to thrive because of fair competition. I pay my provider a lot for broadband internet not for fast access just to their preferred content providers but to the content I choose. If I those that I may as well go back to dial-up for email and pass al together multi media content.
