

7521133872.txt

I have grave concerns regarding the implementation of rules that allow faster Internet access for a higher price than slower connections. I feel that this is a disincentive to improve Internet access speeds for the whole of the citizens of the United States of America. Instead, we should be supporting the improvement of Internet services for all so that it remains the commons for which all citizens can equally communicate, participate in the political process and support the American economy via electronic commerce.