I am not part of any group organizing comments. I am simply someone who is truly mortified and appalled at the prospect of net neutrality disappearing. Unless the FCC acts strongly to guarantee an equal and open path on the internet for everyone, I believe that the great promise of the internet as a social good will be lost. Please consider a decision that would classify internet service providers as common carriers. Otherwise big money and huge corporate interests will win out to the exclusion of small content providers, and regular internet users will be the losers. The internet is a resource that should belong to everybody equally now.
