Net neutrality is central to how the internet works for millions (globally, billions) of people. It affects not just Americans, but everyone in the world. It is important to keep the internet open and accessible to everyone, not just those who pay to get a "fast track."

I oppose any measure, rule, or regulation that would weaken net neutrality because "pay to play" models are inherently unfair and encourages ISPs to let their services fall apart or degrade. If ISPs can force content providers to pay to get better service, ISPs will just degrade service to everyone, only allowing moderately better service for those content providers that pay for it. Eventually, the internet will become harder for consumers to access in its entirety. In a world where the UN defines internet access as a basic human right, weakening net neutrality is inexcusable.

I implore the FCC to abandon its proposed rules that would weaken net neutrality, and instead strengthen it. We cannot afford to have private companies determine who can access the internet and who cannot. We, as a people, deserve to have that right, unimpeded.

Thank you.
