The preliminary decision today by the FCC to move forward with the newly proposed rules to rout net neutrality are outrageous and must be reversed. IP's must be re-designated not as information providers but as common carriers, which everyone can plainly see that they are. Traffic on the internet must all be treated equally. We pay IPs for access to the internet. Beyond that, the IPs need to serve their customers, not act as gatekeepers who can use their position to charge for passage both coming and going. Decades of law are already in place to ensure that fairness rule the internet, not pay to play. The effect will be devastating to what's left of our democracy if these rules go into effect. The FCC must stop kowtowing to the interests of large IPs and listen to the vast majority of the people of this country - and the world - who want to see the internet remain an equal access forum of communication and exchange.
