

7521136125.txt

The Internet should be regulated as a common carrier to ensure fair and equal access to all content and service providers. Allowing Internet Service Providers to sell prioritized routing will stifle innovation and free speech as the largest content and service providers are allowed to dominate the available bandwidth. The FCC should protect our access to Internet content and services just as it does for broadcast television, landline telephone, and radio.