The proposed merger of Comcast and Time Warner would be a disaster for American consumers. The two companies have (in some cases legally sanctioned) monopolies over much of their current coverage areas for cable TV and broadband internet. Allowing them to merge would bring as much as 40% of the U.S. telecommunications market under the control of a single company. This would lead to higher prices and would not give the company(s) any incentive to improve their network infrastructure. The U.S. already lags behind much of the developed world in terms of internet speed and affordability. Please, do not let corporate interests make it worse.
