

7521142853.txt

Me and many others have time and time again confronted issues of this sort of government involvement with the internet. Let me start of by saying that the internet is an open, free, and wide open space that is there for the free exchange of ideas and communication across the entire world. It is not meant to be squeezed for even more profit than it already is from its company providers. This fictitious expectation of the sheer possibility of anything along these lines passing without the people trying their damned hardest to end something like it is non-existent and foolish. I as well as the people of the internet recommend that you end any future pointless endeavors along these lines and to instead focus your attention on other things that actually do matter.