

Hello,

I strongly believe the FCC is going down the wrong path by voting to allow Internet service providers to charge more for some content on the Internet. The Internet is one of the few remaining paths to financial prosperity for everyone, myself included.

When I was growing up, we didn't have much money. My father lost his job and experienced a costly medical problem within the span of one year. The financial burden was a struggle for my parents for many years. I made a promise that I wouldn't struggle for money like my parents did, so within a few years I learned about business and entrepreneurship. I taught myself to build websites so I would have the skills to go into business for myself. But the actions of the FCC are now putting all of that at risk.

By allowing service providers to charge for a "fast lane" on the Internet, you are putting up road blocks that keep entrepreneurs like myself from creating innovative new products. After all, how can someone like me compete with a large company able to pay the fees imposed by the service providers? Simply put, we can't.

If the United States loses net neutrality, I fear that our great nation will continue to fall behind as other nations develop better technology and scientific breakthroughs. This in turn will create even more economic hardships for this country as other countries develop better products and attract the best and brightest minds.

I urge you to do whatever is in your power to ensure an open Internet that will keep America on the path of innovation and economic prosperity. Thank you for your time.

Aaron Wright