

To the Federal Communications Commission

05/17/14

I fully support the notion of an internet service free of added charges and hopefully this attempt of extorting more money out of people will get shut down before it even begins!

By letting companies charge by the service on an international service, as the internet, a dangerous precedent will be set. I am trying to avoid the "slippery slope"-argumentation, but it's really hard to avoid in cases like this. If users can be charged extra for "premium" access to YouTube, then Netflix et al, then when or where will it stop?

Never let this happen. I honestly believe such a move would be an abomination!

Sincerely
Arne D. Erlingsen
