At my address/area are 2 wired providers Comcast and AT&T, although its their service area they both ignore the need for cabled broadband at my house. It really makes me mad, that these are the exact same 2 providers that will spend millions of dollars to take over competition, while they have not even provided service to the people in their own service area.

Ive asked another provider that is just a few miles away if they could bring broadband to my house, they told me they cant do this cause its "att service area" So here the 2 largest telecom companies, trying to get even bigger, won't even deliver service and to make things worse, keep others from delivering service. Comcast clearly searches for the legal borders, just the sell of a partition of their new customers to get the deal accepted is more proof of this.

If Comcast is not tightly regulated it will do whatever it thinks it can get away with, if this deal goes through, there need to be a tight regulation plan, to connect all the people in their service area.

I can understand that if you build your house on top of a mountain it will be unreasonable to ask comcast to provide broadband, if in the past a phone land line has been possible, current broadband should be possible as well.

Force them tightly, tight regulations, tight time table to expand service in their area and hold them accountable to it, before even considering the merger.
