

The whole thing, here, is that by agreeing to this, the only party that comes out in the green, here, is the ISPs, and at what price? Sure, they'll get money out of this, and all good and well, but what about the people who won't be able to afford this premium internet service? Think about the sheer amount of people who use the sites that this will impact. What about people who make their livelihood off of a free and open internet? Imagine those people being out of a job, just because the ISPs want more money. Think of the culture we lose out on because of money. Just think about it. We lose so much more for what they gain. It's not fair, and you know it.