

FCC Document

I believe what you are doing with the net neutrality policy/principle is undoubtedly unreasonable. I don't believe the pros outweigh the cons with being against net neutrality. The internet is a public and free community used for almost everything. To access it you have to purchase a computer, then an internet provider. Now the you as a whole (of FCC) are making it so that we now have to pay for specific parts of the internet that used to be free, for what money. I know it is a huge problem however this is no way to solve it. What about all of the kids who's family don't have a lot of money and he or she tries going on Wikipedia, YouTube, or even history.net to learn about or how to do something. That's another thing his or her family has to pay for. This amazing thing of free access to information for almost everything in the world now comes at a cost. Please try your hardest to understand our point of view. When I say our I mean everyone who I'm fighting for, not just me. Our country is a supposedly a huge supporter of independent business and entrepreneurs, however what you are doing is making it harder for these companies and people to do what they do. This will cause less people to go to their sites, resulting in a loss of profit then paying their employees. This could potentially either destroy or ruin businesses. The government may be gaining money however most others will not. No one who live in the United States would ever want this to happen. What if someone wanted to watch a movie on netflix. They'll do that they at the end of the month they'll get a bill from netflix, their internet provider, then another bill for the usage of their sites. This will apply to so many other internet based things as well. If we lived In a country with golden skyscrapers then this would not be a problem. However we don't and people all already struggling to pay for their internet, now this. Please consider reconsidering what your going to do with the net neutrality policy/principle. Do it for the intelligence, safe being, and freedom of the people of the United States of America.
