Prior to retiring, I spent over 30 years working for a top 100 corporation in sales and marketing positions. As such, I traveled frequently (sometimes several times/week) on the airlines across the entire US. At the time, there were no cell phones, so I made arrangements to stay productive at working via use of a laptop or other work material. Having access to a cell phone was not required. Any comments suggesting that cell phones are needed are ridiculous and would be subjecting the majority of flyers to the whims of the minority who feel they need to be in constant touch with everyone, anytime, anyplace. If you feel such access is important, at least limit it to texting with NO Voice communication.
