

To whom it may concern within the Federal Communications Commission,

The FCC was established to ensure that the people of America have protected rights when it came to new technologies, which at the time were telephones and later television. But today we have the internet which acts as a mash up of many different things, but above anything it is a telecommunications service and in that right should be a common carrier. This is not a matter that should be taken lightly and I do not wish to tell my future children of a time when the internet was a free place where ideas and innovation could be seen in nearly every corner. I want them to experience that. When the internet is no longer neutral we lose all of the progress that has been made the last 20 years. Do not let this happen, and do not make a fast lane service. We ought to be ensuring that every "lane" on the internet is the fastest that it can be. This is the land the the internet saw its birth, don't let it die here too.

Noah Smith