In creating the internet as we have known it, the US created one of the few truly democratic institutions in our history. And that openness and fairness has served us well for several decades. I want to see this continue and the "net neutrality" regime only made stronger by declaring the internet a Type II Common Carrier (something that you should also consider with respect to wireless broadband).

For those of us who live in more rural areas, the internet is a critical link, both personally and commercially. Whatever its current problems, the internet will not be made better by adding it to the nexus of great disparities already plaguing our nation. Maintain the relatively level playing field the internet currently enjoys.

Finally, the internet was created with public funds. The best return on our "investment" is to maintain it as a public, democratic resource for all.
