

To the FCC,

I just wanted to voice my opinion directly to you, that I am in support of a free and open internet. I feel that it is important to education, innovators, and consumers that the internet continues on in this way.

Creating discrimination through fees will not benefit the majority but place more obstacles in the way of those looking to educate themselves through personal research, american innovators looking to reach out to a larger audience, and the consumers who are looking for places to express themselves and communicate freely with their friends and families.

Let me quote the letter sent to you from Amazon, Dropbox, Ebay, Etsy, Facebook, Google, Kickstarter, Linkedin, Microsoft, Netflix, and more.

"We write to express our support for a free and open internet. Over the past twenty years, AMERICAN innovators have created countless Internet-based applications, content offerings, and services that are used around the world. These innovations have created enormous value for Internet users, fueled economic growth, and made our Internet companies global leaders. The innovation we have seen to date happened in a world WITHOUT discrimination. An open Internet has also been a platform for free speech and opportunity for billions of users."

Sincerely,
Jenna Zona
