To whom it may concern:

I'm writing in regards to the merger between Comcast and Time Warner Cable. This merger seems to be against the best interests of regular Americans. It could potentially restrict our internet access to only the content that the given ISP allows. The merger will give Comcast control over all of Time Warner's customers' service. Which means that they will have less competition and more power than they currently do.

It is important that internet users can access any and all content without the discretion of their ISP. ISPs already are protected against ~~user~~ liability when it comes to what their customers access. ~~user~~ They should not be allowed to decide what content they supply.

To be clear, I'm against the merger. Internet users should be allowed discretion on which data they access. Monopolies in "information services" should be blocked.

Thank you for your time,

Melissa Pipkin
