

7521153688.txt

Without specifically prohibiting internet "fast" and "slow" lanes, the government will be allowing corporations to increase their influence in a huge way. Smaller creative entities will, essentially, be priced-out of access to their audiences. I understand that this form is useless, and that laws will be drafted based on whatever major corporations desire due to the overwhelming influence of lobbyists on the government, but this is a huge issue which will have worldwide consequences related to the dispersal of information for generations to come, and I feel that I need to make my voice heard in some way. Of course, being a cynic, I expect that this entry will be read by no one, and that the laws will be written without any consideration of the public's opinion (despite the fact that we've voted YOU, our representatives, into your position). Thanks for pretending to care, though.