To put it as succinctly as I possibly can, I am against these proposals for the internet and take a strong stand against them as one person can take. This proposal would undermine everything that the internet is supposed to be: a free, open place for debate and information exchange.

The only acceptable way to protect the integrity and future of the internet is to use the powers delegated to the FCC to reclassify broadband as a public utility and regulate it as such. The future of the internet should be decided by the will of the people, not corporate interests.
