Pure, true net neutrality must continue in order for the freedom of thought, brought forth in the Bill of Rights and the US Constitution to take hold in this modern world. Intellectually, a free internet is critical to maintaining the US as a nation at the forefront of the world. What will it say about the state of the nation if individuals in developing countries have greater access to true, honest viewpoints than the Americans in their supposedly "free" country. It is absurd. To allow differential access will only create further divisions. Separate but equal is inherently unequal. Why have we not learned this lesson before? Why must we sacrifice all that we hold true as Americans to give a handful of commercial interests even greater power? True, complete, unfettered access to ALL websites EQUALLY is the only manner in which we could even claim to be a free country, politically, economically, intellectually, or otherwise.
