As you can see, we are all vehemently opposed to big companies throwing their money around to decide which content gets bandwidth priority. This will open the door to all kinds of terrible stuff, including the monopolization of the internet itself. The mainstream media is already dominated by corporate interests; important things take the backseat while profitable things take the spotlight. Leave the internet alone. It's the last avenue we have against people who think they know what we should be doing with our lives (making them money). Net neutrality is the rightful configuration of the internet. Mess with it, and you will see the entire world rise against you.
