I am writing to express my support for a free and open Internet. An open Internet has long been a platform for free speech and opportunity for billions of users. According to recent news reports, the Commission intends to enable phone and cable Internet service providers to discriminate between various types of Internet traffic. If these reports are correct, this represents a grave threat to the Internet.

The Commission should enact rules requiring that Internet service providers treat traffic from all sources with equal priority, and remain neutral regarding the data being transmitted. Such rules are essential for the future of the Internet. This Commission should take the necessary steps to ensure that the Internet remains an open platform for speech and commerce.
