I would like to register my disagreement with any proposal that allows for ISPs to adjust effective bandwidth or throughput based for certain data based on any criteria. It is important that all data be given equal priority, and thus ISPs should be reclassified as Title II Common Carriers. The internet is currently a level playing field where even the smallest startup can grow to become a behemoth like Netflix. Allowing ISPs to charge companies like Netflix extra money to be in a "fast lane" to the ISP's customers would ruin this model, and effectively prevent smaller companies from flourishing.
