The internet should be free and accessible to all Americans, without regard to privatized interests. Allowing for speeds or bifurcated internet access is a danger to 1st Amendment speech, and to freedom of information. Comcast, Time Warner, Verizon, and other corporate lobby groups are not the people--and do not deserve to be awarded with additional bandwidth. They make PLENTY of profit already, and have created a monopoly in many areas. I demand that the FCC halt all current and future consideration of permitting internet service providers with "fast" and "slow" broadband lanes, or the reclassification of broadband as a telecommunications service. The FCC has a duty to the American people to keep the internet fully accessible to all. I support net neutrality.
