

7521168109.txt

I firmly believe in the protection of an equal internet for all. The implementation of tiers for accessing and distributing information through out the internet goes against this. If a company has to pay for a fast lane, what then would the other lane offer. By paying for better access all that would do is trickle down to consumers and we would have to pay more for all our online needs. Why this is not addressed baffles the mind.