Please rule that internet service providers are a common carrier telecommunications service.

If a telephone company can't tell me who I can or can't call, and can't listen in on my conversations, then the same should be true of whose web services I can or can't access. Also, I believe it should be illegal for internet service providers to monitor who I contact via their service, in the same way it's illegal for the telephone companies to listen in to my conversations without a request by law enforcement.
