Comcast and Time Warner Cable are right now each horrible. Why? They have no competition. They have completely failed and/or simply agreed to not compete with each other on "their" turf. Will they get "better" if they formalize that de-facto non-competition agreement through merger? Of course not! This is exactly what the FCC is for -- preventing this kind of cartel behavior in our communication systems. Stop, or get out of the way! It is shameful that the FCC is even giving this hearing; it should have been stopped at the front door: "No, thank you, we don't allow cartels in the United States of America." Wish.
