The access to a open internet is what allowed the World Wide Web to grow into the super power it is today. Without it, there would be no Google, no Amazon, no Netflix, and millions of other sites and apps would never have been created or survived, let alone grown to market dominance. We need to preserve a free and open internet. The rules you are proposing do nothing but create the first death knell of the internet. Your proposal will allow in principle the creation of "highways" but in actuality will just create a slow lane and a business as usual way. These rules do nothing to promote a better experience for the consumer and just create a new means for ISPs to make even more money.
