

I believe the Internet should be regulated as any other utility is. There is no other benefit to disrupting net neutrality other than allowing Internet providers to profit further and unreasonably from basic social services. Internet is not a luxury service; in this day and age it is a necessity to modern life. Communication, knowledge share, employment opportunities, financial transactions etc. have all moved dominantly to the internet - allowing citizen access to these things to fall under monopoly domination is not right or just. Additionally removing equal opportunity for small businesses to share and deliver services is not only completely wrong it only serves to weaken our economy further. This is a very sad state of affairs and it will be a tragic day in the United States if this becomes a reality.
