Fair and open competition - and the mountains of innovation we've enjoyed from a variety of startups over the last few decades - depend on net neutrality to keep the playing field level. Please preserve it, and prevent providers from charging money to service providers for faster speeds. To do otherwise would kill competition and bring a halt to innovation, leaving us in the dust of other countries.

We, the consumers, ALREADY pay a premium for faster internet. We expect it across the board - not hobbled from service to service based on the highest bidder.
