If you weren't already clear, there's a monopoly going on in the media. We are controlled by every angle by the six white, middle-aged men who want us only to hear what they deem acceptable. This is completely unfair. Ending net neutrality would be a gift to the corporations who want nothing more than to further their own riches. We deserve to have freedom over the information we receive. We deserve to have fast, affordable internet. The internet is the only place left where people can find reliable information not tainted by corporate greed. To end net neutrality would be the end of that freedom. Corporations rule our world, and giving them more power is the last thing we need to do. You always hear of other countries censoring internet access and important news. I wonder how many people know that this is the exact angle our country is heading towards.
