To the Commission:

A multi-tiered system for internet access is a tremendous mistake for the country. The "level playing field" has enabled new companies to enter and compete in the marketplace, and this regulation is a move by the giants to restrict trade and line their pockets. No other developed country in the world operates that way.

You have the power and backing of the Supreme Court to reclassify the internet infrastructure providers as telecommunications services. They truly are common carriers and this is most definitely NOT an outdated concept, but rather is more relevant than ever. Please take this step, weather Verizon's inevitable lawsuit, and move forward in the interest of our country, not the interest of a couple big companies.

Respectfully,

Michael Richter
