

7521205333.txt

I would like to begin by saying that I have never posted a comment on a public place on the internet before in my life and I'm a young woman who uses the internet multiple times a day.

I have been frustrated on numerous occasions due to the lack of competition among cable companies. I have had plenty of customer service calls (especially with Comcast) where their basic response shows they have no consideration for their customers as we had no where else to go. Now they are realizing that the internet has the potential to provide, not only another venue, but also content as several companies and my own peers have created quality programs and stories, bypassing these enormous, soul-less, disrespectful, corrupt and simply disgusting companies. They are scared and they are using their "speech money" to get back control. I have little hope you will do anything, the government enjoys the "speech" of these companies far too much and I could never earn that much "speech" in my lifetime, let alone be able to afford to buy lobbyists to distribute it for me. However I would feel like I wasn't doing my part if I didn't say how disappointed...no, not disappointed because that implies surprise...how depressed I am to know about your self serving inevitable decision. Neither Comcast nor Time Warner will ever get my money if I can avoid it and I suspect I will say the same of ATT soon. I address the customers when I say we need to say no to this, we need to say no to them, we need to say no to the FCC.