First I would like to address that I don't feel comfortable releasing my personal information, since this must be done over my internet provider, who is currently attempting to limit my access to the service I pay for in order to achieve their own ends (similar to a gangland style takeover, or monopoly that is supposedly illegal in the United States.)

Creating an effort to separate the internet into a paid speed and an unpaid speed is effectively creating a class system on the internet. This type of system not only goes against the free exchange of information that the internet WAS based on, but creates a system that goes against the land of opportunity that this country is supposed to be. It effectively creates a system where a cable provider is allowed to decide how much information is allowed to go where, allowing them unprecedented authority over the media that is sent to the homes of our entire country. This is an utter disgrace to even consider and is tantamount to calling our forefathers who created this country and our constitution idiots.

Whatever guise this type of system is presented in, it amounts to being required to pay for standard access. It also opens the door to arbitrate what content is even allowed to be on the internet by allowing a cable company to prevent any usable bandwidth from being consumed by a company they take issue with. I'm not an attorney, but this seems to put those companies, and possibly the government for instituting such a policy, in a very actionable position since they would be discriminating based on income.

If someone truly believes that we as Americans are EVER created equal, they wouldn't stand for this type of behavior, or be able to even consider it as something that can be allowed.
