

7521210986.txt

I am extremely concerned with net neutrality. Allowing companies to purchase faster speeds from Internet providers goes against everything this country stands for. This will allow the big companies to push out start-up technology companies because the start-ups will not be able to afford the faster speeds. It will also allow the cable/internet companies to bully companies like Netflix when they want to negotiate. Comcast has in fact already done this to Netflix. The fact that Comcast has spent almost 20 million dollars for this should tell anyone with common sense that this will only benefit the cable companies and no one else. But I imagine that the cable companies will get their way because it has become clear that the government only listens to money.