I have been living in South East Asia for the last two and a half years and am amazed at how inexpensive and fast the internet connection is in other countries as compared to the US. Even cities in developing world nations have competition amongst multiple providers. In the country of Laos I am currently paying $6 per month for 3g and $12 per month for home internet. The communications industry monopoly in the States is not only an absolute disgrace, but also a detriment to the consumers who the FCC should be tasked with protecting. The leaders at the FCC should be ashamed of themselves.
