

7521215729.txt

The Internet needs to remain a neutral -no tiered system-no two speed system. Access must not be challenged. The U.S. is a weakened nation. We are on the bottom of the lists in medical care, education, safety, wages, and job opportunities. Society will weaken dramatically. Unequal access will weaken this country to an extreme. We can't afford, in humanity or in dollars, this profit minded move to disenfranchise much of our country.

In my community, family-wage jobs have gone out of the country. Higher paid, long-time professionals in the medical and educational systems, here, are being let go. People can't own homes, and homes are cheaper here than in much of the rest of the country. People can't afford to keep their cell phones all year round. They use the library computers/internet. The library has dwindling funds. The library computers are used at an increasing rate for people to apply for jobs, submit their taxes, and do their daily business because people can't afford a computer. Schools have extremely dwindling funds. How can the poorer districts prepare their students to compete with the richer districts if even the basic requirements are further out of reach?

The internet must not be sold. This is a backward move the country may never recover from, within and without. Other countries will see our weakened state and our impoverished people. We have already lost our high standing in the international community. We cannot afford to continue this decline. People in other countries already do not believe the U.S. is healthy. We cannot afford to hurt our citizens further nor damage the little respect we have internationally. Keep the internet neutral.