

7521224763.txt

I disagree with the rules being promoted by the FCC regarding net neutrality which allows for the use of so-called "fast lanes" that can be payed for by companies to insure smooth access by consumers. I believe that this policy will discourage and negatively effect the market. It would have the effect of blocking out smaller companies and start ups who are not able to pay higher fees to providers for faster access speeds. I believe that the FCC should continue to not allow the levy of usage fees against companies by providers.