

7521225144.txt

Given the lack of competition in the Internet service provider industry, it seems unethical to allow there to be even more control over content distribution over the Internet. The government has allowed for industry to control and manipulate systems in the American public for decades and allowing large corporations to control Internet distribution would be just another example. Internet service providers are notoriously poor at customer service and customer satisfaction. This has led myself and others to look for alternatives to Internet service rather than using their over priced and poorly serviced systems. Price increases without increase in reliability or service has become a common theme and I anticipate will not change even if they were to get their way in gaining access to content control.