

752123~1.TXT

Disturbing the Open Internet Broadband practices would be a destruction of the American dream and a bastardization of government oversight. The FCC even considering a proposal to allow anyone to control the distribution of bandwidth would drastically halt small-business growth in sectors such as cloud computing, web development, and online sales.

What is the benefit of allowing anyone to regulate bandwidth for particular uses? The money paid to anyone regulating the internet will not serve to increase jobs nor to bolster already low wages in this delicate economy. The only result will be the rich getting richer and the poor closing their virtual doors to the public.