

7521244338.txt

This is a money grab that hurts the American customer, American business, and American way of life. The internet is a pillar of modern society where an idea can grow into a movement, a roaring business, or more - whomever the source. Any system that threatens that voice to be heard over those with deep pockets takes away power from the populace and shuffles it further into the hands of the few. When will my business be threatened with lower service levels until I pay the piper like Netflix experienced? How can I compete with Netflix given they've paid Comcast for the fast lane even if my service is better in every way but the speed at which it is delivered? It's a barrier to entry for new business that empowers titans. We can do better. The cable monopolies, be it Comcast, or TimeWarner, offer little competition to each other. Service levels are lower and more expensive than many other countries in the world, and why not - there's no incentive to do more. These companies are not held in high esteem because, in the end, the American consumer knows they are being gouged. Our liberties are at stake. Please keep the internet a level playing field. Thank you.